Discussion
Lingcod Update
This study was started was due to poor population status and could provide a potential benefit to stock assessment and survival. We are exploring the possibility of jump starting the population; and is not to create hatcheries. The method used is acoustic telemetry with small scale releases; the pilot study consists of 25-45 fish with tags. Twenty-five percent of the yearlings which were released in early July are still there. Sub-yearlings are appearing on rocky reefs. We have deployed stationary receivers and are retrieving them to analyze the data they have collected. One fish was caught from a 2004 release. We would to publish more photos of tags and provide phone numbers to report found tags. DFW creel surveyors are collecting fin clips.

Conclusions
Conduct a diet study to find out what they are eating in Puget Sound. Fill in box 1 (presented). Do egg collections in 2011 (January-March). Use NOAA [scientific] divers from Manchester and possibly Seattle. Have cooperative effort for this study with NWIFC, NOAA, and WDFW. Raise fish for production. Reduce cannibalism. Have surveys at two of the four sites. For 2012 have up to 300,000 yearling lingcod at two related sites.

DISCUSSION  |  Legislative Update
Language tweaks in proposals from PSRFE to update statutes for the committee provided with bullets and there was concern. Once provided with full context, was acceptable.

CONCLUSIONS
Provide full language proposals for approval, not just bullets.

DISCUSSION  |  Meeting Meals
With all the budget cuts going on the agency, it is wise to continue having a meal provided or should we start brown bagging?

CONCLUSIONS
The public comments indicated that we should continue to have a meal as long as the costs were moderate as they are appreciative of the hard work that the group does for the recreational fisheries, and many of those attending are coming in straight from their respective job site.

DISCUSSION  |  Full-time Coordinator
Steve Thiesfeld gave a review of what it would cost (no frills) to pay for a full-time coordinator which would include such things as vehicle, computer, phone, etc. This person would not only provide paperwork involved (budget and other reports), but would be a spokesperson and would do a lot of traveling. Jim Scott would like to see us commit to more than one biennium if we go this route.

CONCLUSIONS
We need to find funding for this position and would like the group to provide where we can cut in our projects.

There was much discussion on where the funding could come from, however, no decision was made. It is suggested that the group look at which of the projects are contributing the most to our success and drop those that are not productive, or to do a straight across the board cut within the projects. Go to managers and let them know that the group feels that a full-time coordinator will enable the committee to reach their goals, but we need their help in deciding how to accomplish a budget for this position.
